Harold,

Please excuse the delay in getting this article to you.

Oliver Stone appears to be a very embattled man. Deservedly so you might add. A full "behind the scenes" story on the movie might be interesting reading some day. Paranoia makes me believe that he had more than his usual critics to deal with in making the movie.

I don't share your total disgust with the movie. I've been to too many dinner parties where otherwise educated, intelligent and well-informed people have speculated wildly through the entire spectrum of fantastic theories. You yourself have always ~~asked~~ said: in investigating a murder ask who would benefit from such a crime? In this regard, Harold, I think the movie will do a passable job in laying out the logic. Attention will be placed on the institutions that allowed such a crime and cover-up to occur. Millions of people will ask the above question after viewing the movie. Whether acceptable or not the movie will do more to shed light on the subject than any other previous concerted effort. It's the way of our media world. I guess we just have to hope that Stone hasn't played too fast and loose with the facts.

I would be interested in hearing your reaction to the movie. You'll probably be interviewed no doubt.

Happy holidays and I hope the New Year brings you better health.

Regards

Steve
